Since 1992, First Nations House has provided a positive environment for all students to engage with U of T’s vibrant and diverse Aboriginal community.

leadership and engagement

Learning at U of T is more than attending class. Take advantage of opportunities to reflect on and make meaning of your experience. Cultural events, social gatherings and student groups assist in establishing connections within U of T and Toronto’s Aboriginal community.

Get involved in a mentoring program or write for FNH magazine. It will enhance your experience at U of T and is a great opportunity to meet new people.

We welcome you to drop in and explore the incredible collection of Indigenous art that adorns our walls.

academic excellence

Get support through academic counselling, advocacy, financial aid and planning and computer facilities. Other services provided include access to tutors, writing supports and a resource centre.

spiritual growth

Elders and Traditional Teachers are vital to the Aboriginal community. Get support and guidance through our Elder-in-Residence program or attend one of the many teachings held at FNH.

Learn about growing plants indigenous to North America and find a connection to each other and to the earth at the Kahontake Kitikan garden at the east side of Hart House. Cultural events and teachings are held often in the garden.
